

Press Release:
Utah State Charter
School Board
Announces New
Staff Member
Amy Pace

Amy Pace has spent the last 24 years teaching science to the students and teachers of Utah for both traditional and charter schools. She recently transitioned out of the classroom and into a new position as the Strategic Growth and Innovation Specialist for the Utah State Charter School Board, where she will continue to support teachers and students. Amy graduated from Southern Utah University in 1998, with a BS in Biology and a Secondary Teaching Certificate. She completed her Masters in Education as part of the Instructional Design and Educational Technology program at the University of Utah in 2022. With lofty goals of becoming a leader in education, Amy is excited to use her skills and background in her new position. She loves working with her fellow teachers and school leaders, sharing her passion for education.

Amy has been very involved with the Utah Science Teaching Association in the past, serving four terms as regional representative, and one term as president. Throughout her career, Amy has received several prestigious awards, The Presidential Award for Excellence in Math and Science Teaching, The Governor's Medal for Science and Technology, The Utah Energy Educator Award, and was selected to represent the United States as part of the TOMODACHI Toshiba Leadership Academy in Tokyo, Japan. She currently serves on the Utah Secondary Science Advisory Team, for the Utah State Board of Education, and facilitates Teacher Endorsement Courses for teachers working on furthering their education, for the Utah Science Teaching Association.
